

FUEL SHORTAGES: ONE OF THE PRIMARY REASONS WHY GERMANY LOST THE WAR

At the risk of letting facts interfere with a good hoax, Germany—to a great extent—lost the war because they ran out of fuel. That's a historical, military certainty. Being so desperately low on this vital resource, why would they deliberately direct fuel to alleged genocidal crematoria rather than feed tanks, jeeps, trains and fighter jets? Such a move would epitomize waste, especially when Germany actually tried to win WW II.

In addition, why won't the holocaust crowd tell people that during the war, U.S. reconnaissance planes snapped thousands of photos of Germany's countryside? Yet not a single one of these pictures depicts long lines of fuel trucks traveling to the supposed crematoria (including those in Poland). Obviously, to slay six million people, literally thousands of tankers would be needed to supply enough for the ovens. But not a shred of evidence exists confirming that fuel trucks were used for this purpose.

Strangely, U.S. spy planes also didn't photograph any billowing smokestacks that would have emitted exhaust from ovens operating on a 24-hour basis to kill six million people. Imagine the vastness of an operation needed to cremate six million people, yet no spewing smokestacks.

It gets even more peculiar. The Germans kept meticulous records that were seized following WW II, yet not a single book can be located documenting tens of thousands of trucks delivering fuel to any of the purported crematoria. These records don't exist because Germany required the petrol for more pressing matters, namely fighting the war.

Then there's the pesky little problem of coal that could have been used to cremate Jews. But hundreds of thousands of tons of coal was instead used to produce synthetic gasoline. In simplest terms, the Germans couldn't generate enough fuel to even keep their war machine running, let alone to cook six million Jews. That's one of the primary reasons why they lost the war.

LOGISTICS: NOT ENOUGH TIME OR MANPOWER TO IMPLEMENT SUCH A MASSIVE OPERATION

Instead of playing ring-around-the-rosie (like holocaust historians do), let's be realistic. Why would supposed genocidal Germans exert millions of man-hours transporting Jews out of their own country in order to slaughter them on foreign soil? Imagine how many trains, thousands of gallons of fuel, and personnel would be needed to undertake such a task. Why tie up the rails with millions of Jews transported hundreds of miles when these same trains could be used to carry soldiers and munitions?

If the SS were such efficient killers, why not just shoot a single bullet on German soil into the heads of these Jews? Pardon the sarcasm, but maybe this explanation and the use of practical common sense makes the picture a little bit too clear.

Also, when viewing photos of Auschwitz and other camps, why build thousands of housing units to let Jews live in when—allegedly—they were only going to be killed anyway? Or, were all these barracks instead utilized to house valuable laborers? Plus, why were the Germans constructing water purification plants on the premises if Jews were merely going to be killed? Dead people don't need to drink water, but laborers do.

For that matter, let's slaughter another sacred cow: If Nazis solely intended to kill Jews, why waste the energy tattooing them? Or, were these identification numbers instead a way to keep track of their workers?

SAFETY AND COMFORT: CONCENTRATION CAMPS WERE
THE SAFEST PLACE FOR JEWS IN EUROPE DURING WW II

Pardon the insistence on actual documentation, but footage from German-run work camps during WW II shows shopping centers on the premises, not to mention sports fields (for soccer matches), swimming pools, town squares, concert halls, libraries and post offices.

Considering war-torn Germany during the latter part of WW II, especially in the ghettos, many laborers forced into these industrial centers actually found an improved standard-of-living. Now, rather than relying on infantile reasoning, why would the Germans provide all these amenities if they were simply going to cremate millions of Jews?

Or, were these creature comforts instead intended to keep their workers at least relatively contented? In addition, evidence shows that productive laborers inside these camps were granted special privileges, including nights at the orchestra.

Instead of tap dancing around the issue, the fact remains that concentration camp money, called “Lagergeld,” was created to pay laborers for their efforts. This currency was used at Auschwitz, Buchenwald and Dachau. This payment system included Jewish employees who received “scrip” papers that they later redeemed to buy goods at stores located inside these industrial centers.

What a queer idea, don't you think, giving Jewish slaves a paycheck . . . the same ones that the Nazis were supposedly going to execute in ovens?

Taken one step further, not only weren't there any

Examples of work camp currency execution camps operated by the Nazis, these labor facilities actually became some of the safest places in Europe by war's end.

Because western powers had investments in camps such as I.G. Farben, they deliberately didn't bomb the huge industrial centers (i.e. concentration camps) because it would have cost them too much money. As such, since Jews were working at these labor camps, they were, in effect, safer under German control than was most anyone else in the population (especially in Dresden, which suffered an atrocious, real-life fire-bombing holocaust).

I.G. Farben industrial center

How inconvenient, don't you think, when facts illuminate a subject that had previously been so muddied by disinformation and propaganda. Whereas German families were getting decimated and killed by the thousands during Allied onslaughts, the Jews were protected and safe in their work camps.

So, let's be clear. The Jews were residing in Polish and German centers, kept safely apart from everyday Germans that were dying horrific deaths on a daily basis. These Jews weren't being fried in gas chambers. Rather, after each workday, the Jews lounged in libraries, watched soccer matches, were attended to by doctors and nurses, and attended symphonies.

Ask yourself: why would the Germans keep Jews healthy with medical care in state-of-the-art hospitals only to expunge them later? Or, how is it possible to believe the holocaust historians' cock-and-bull stories that Jews were gassed only hours after stepping off trains carrying them to Poland? It simply isn't true.
