

INTRODUCTION:

A SUSPENSION OF DISBELIEF

It's the 20th century's most preposterous fairytale, also known as the holocaust hoax. Anyone approaching this subject with an open mind should seriously consider using the words of 1 Corinthians 13:11 as their guide. "It's time to put away childish things." So, akin to Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny and any other figment of the imagination, the tale of six million Jews being exterminated in National Socialist death camps is nothing more than a deceptive ruse.

In the following pages readers will encounter some of the most imaginative storytelling known to mankind. Or, if we call a spade a spade, the lies perpetrated by holohoax "historians" are so egregious, weakly constructed and downright ludicrous that it'd be hilarious if it weren't so pathetic. Who needs scandal-ridden Jewish satirist Lenny Bruce for chuckles when these tall tales make for more humorous comedy material?

The official story handed down for the past six generations has Nazis exterminating six million Jews in concentration camps during World War II. Of course, something can allegedly be "proven true" thousands of times, but if it's disproven on only one occasion, it can never be true again.

While keeping this important truism in mind, if any impartial researcher utilized the scientific method, they'd discover that it's literally child's play to shred, dissect and leave for dead the flimsy holocaust myth.

Using simple common sense, reason and logic, the entire house of cards surrounding this massive fraud crumbles under the weight of its own lies. Only through a complete and utter suspension of disbelief can this absurd deception be accepted.

Naturally, there exist highly paid conmen (and conwomen) who proclaim that no one can discuss, debate or even dare to question this paper tiger called the holocaust. One of the most debauched propagandists, Deborah Lipstadt, says there can be no alternate version to the holocaust yarn other than the officially sanctioned one. However, in an open society that should be promoting intellectual discussion and debate, if anyone dares to broach this subject instead of walking in jack-booted lockstep with the Jewish propaganda machine, they're immediately labeled "anti-Semitic." In the Zionist's Orwellian Ministry of Untruth, one repeats only the Big Brother mantra of Six Million Six Million Six Million, or else they suffer irreparable consequences.

In Europe, scores of researchers have been imprisoned for merely questioning holocaust numbers or claims. They committed absolutely no crime whatsoever other than simply asking questions. For such an apparent offense, they were thrown behind bars for, sometimes, years at a time. Is that what we want in the United States of America, too?

Does our First Amendment still apply, or will we bow to a dictatorial, maniacal iron fist of intolerance and suppression? Because a clandestine group of scriptwriters carefully crafted this elaborate hoax, should the rest of society be forced to unwittingly accept it without argument just because they said so?

With this book—and many published previous to it—the cat is now out of its proverbial bag and the emperor has been exposed as wearing no clothes. Santa Claus is an infantile charade, and the holocaust is laughable in its sheer absurdity.

LABOR CAMPS, NOT DEATH FACTORIES

To proceed in investigating this matter, the use of critical thought is crucial. At the height of WW II, the Germans had approximately eight million men fighting their various battles on all fronts; three million in Russia alone. The Germans were so desperate for soldiers by war's end that they were drafting literally every able-bodied man between the ages of 16 and 45. In essence, anyone they could get their hands on.

Let's remember: this is WW II—the biggest military operation in history. Four million Germans were eventually killed. So, considering the vast requirements needed for their war machine, who made all the tanks, bullets, uniforms, guns, boots, helmets, and scores of other necessities to maintain their armies on the battlefield?

Put another way, with all their men already fighting the war, Germany sought workers for their factories by any means necessary. In this regard, if the Jews could serve as much-needed labor, how logical would it be to then kill these workers?

Furthermore, one of the primary reasons Germany lost WW II was because Allied forces cutoff their fuel supplies. As a result, Germany was forced to create synthetic oil. Being that their massive war machine—tanks, jeeps, trains and planes—required exorbitant amounts of fuel, how is it possible that the Germans would expend (i.e. waste) the millions of gallons of fuel needed to gas six million Jews?

As will be proven later, not a single Jew was deliberately gassed to death in any German-maintained concentration camp. Thus, are we to swallow the line that Germany would squander their resources to transport six million Jews, by train, to foreign countries only to kill them abroad?

For those still clinging to the holocaust fable, it's time to start popping a few balloons. On Dec. 28, 1942 Heinrich Himmler issued a command. "The death rate in concentration camps must be reduced at all costs."

Heinrich Himmler

Such a demand is peculiar because weren't the Nazis supposed to be murdering their Jewish inmates, not sparing their lives? In response, camp inspector Richard Glucks wrote on Jan. 20, 1943, "Every means will be used to lower death rates."

Then, by Apr. 10, 1943 Oswald Pohl's Economic Administration Office revealed that deaths had plummeted in their work centers from 8.5 percent in July 1942 to 2.8 percent in June 1943.

These numbers make perfect sense, especially at Auschwitz, which was a sprawling industrial center desperate for laborers. Himmler's exact words were, "Camp doctors are to see to it that working conditions at the various labor places are improved as much as possible." Himmler also inspected each camp to evaluate its efficiency . . . not in executing workers, but instead to determine how effectively they were producing war goods. If laborers died, it hampered production.

Also, Reinhard Heydrich, head of Germany's secret police and purported "Final Solution" author at the notorious Wannsee Conference, actually wrote on Jan. 20, 1942, "Under proper direction the Jews should now in the course of the Final Solution [Endlosung] be brought to the East in a suitable way for use as labor."

Likewise, in Apr. 1942 SS Gen. Oswald Pohl demanded, "Mobilization of the labor power of all internees primarily for war tasks must take absolute precedence."

Jews, similar to Slavs, gypsies, homosexuals and Catholics were all valuable commodities that could be put to work in factories owned by companies such as I.G. Farben. Photographs from the early-to-mid 1940s reveal that Auschwitz was an enormous industrial complex where rubber, medical supplies, weaponry and clothes were manufactured.

At Auschwitz alone, 39 different work camps existed, 19 consisting primarily of Jews. One factory—Monowitz No. 16 camp—boasted 126,000 laborers. Clearly, Jews were a vital aspect of keeping the wheels of their war machine rolling.

On Apr. 17, 1943 Adolf Hitler made a request of Adm. Milos Horthy. He wanted “100,000 Jews to work on a new pursuit plane program.” How strange, especially since we're told that Hitler supposedly wanted each and every Jew imaginable to be exterminated. Then, in May 1944 Hitler, of his own volition, sought 200,000 more Jews to work in his war machine factories.

200,000—that's an extremely large number, and when added to the previous 100,000—that's plenty of Jews kept alive, not slaughtered.

Forced labor served as a key component of Germany's war efforts, especially during the final years from 1943-1945. Again, at Auschwitz, almost 1,000 industrial sub-camps were spawned to provide labor. Jews, among others, also built roads and houses, picked up trash, or worked as miners in quarries.

At the risk of being repetitive, Jews were cheap labor that was exploited by the SS, I.G. Farben, and numerous German manufacturers. For example, at Auschwitz, workers produced Buna, a synthetic rubber used to make tires.

Why would the Germans ship hundreds of thousands of slaves to factories only to kill them? Such a thought is absurd. Again, Germany was inordinately desperate for workers. Homicidal gas chambers were the furthest notion from their minds.

To document this fact, the Netherlands Red Cross released letters written by Jewish workers at Auschwitz. In their correspondences, they described their duties as “hard but tolerable,” the food as “adequate,” and their sleeping quarters as “good.”

Let's address one simple proposition: during WW II's most heated moments, why would the Germans transform vast industrial centers like Auschwitz—that supplied their war machine—into extermination camps? All of the resources needed to supply their troops would suddenly be diverted into ovens to cook people, particularly when they were fighting the Americans, English, French and Russians on various fronts.

A case in point: on Aug. 15, 1944 Hungarian Jews totaling 90,000 were exported to work centers. Later in that same year, Himmler stated that 40 percent more fighter planes rolled off the assembly line due to labor provided by these Hungarian Jews. Far from wanting them incinerated, Jewish labor was an asset to the Germans. The Holocaust extermination theory simply doesn't make sense.
